The WolfWare Logo

Our logo is a rendition of the head of a white wolf superimposed on a red-lit full moon. The image was created by Charles Brabec.

The red moon was generated using a NASA lunar map rendered on a sphere in the presence of a red light source.

The wolf image was borrowed from the original "White Wolf" painting by wildlife artist Doug Lehnhardt, as seen below. Mr. Lehnhardt has kindly given us permission to use this artwork in our logo. This painting, and a number of other wolf-themed paintings he has done are available on his website at:

http://www2.ald.net/~dougl/

But there are six white wolves
In the dead of the night
On the branch of a tree

And they have such big eyes
And they're shining so bright
All the better to see

And they have such big ears
All the better to hear
And they're listening to me from Funny You Should Say That,

by Eric Woolfson and Alan Parsons